AI and the Future of International Chinese Language Teaching

16-19 June 2026, Edinburgh

OUR STORIES

HU Mengwen

Chinese Language Teacher
CI at University College Dublin

During the 2024 Advanced Summer School for Chinese Language Teachers, I systematically completed the entire academic writing process from scratch through the programme's innovative model combining group learning with one-on-one mentoring. Under the patient guidance of my mentor, I completed a paper on the application of AI technology in differentiated instruction in the Chinese language classroom. This paper is scheduled to be published in International Chinese Language Teaching (Chinese and English edition) in June 2026, and I have also shared my findings at several academic conferences. I sincerely recommend this programme, especially for Chinese language teachers who wish to deepen their expertise in the field and enhance their academic writing skills.

Doctoral Student
Shanghai International Studies
University

In June 2024, I took part in the Advanced Summer School for Chinese Language Teachers, where I had the opportunity to learn and exchange ideas with Chinese language teachers from the UK, Ireland, and the United States. After the programme, under the one-on-one guidance of my mentor, I co-authored two research papers with another participant. Through this process, I truly experienced the rigour and joy of transforming teaching practice into research outcomes. I am now a doctoral student at Shanghai International Studies University, and I continue to move forward on my path in Chinese language teaching and research, carrying with me the vision and strength I gained in Edinburgh.
